Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Prominent orthopedic surgeon Dr. Augustus A. White III was born in Memphis, Tennessee, the son of a doctor and a librarian. After attending segregated schools in Memphis, White graduated from the private Mount Herman School in Northfield, Massachusetts, in 1953. White completed his pre-medical studies at Brown University in 1957, and in 1961 was the first African American graduate of the Stanford University School of Medicine. Receiving his Ph.D. degree in orthopedic biomechanics at the Karolinska Institute in Sweden, White became the first African American surgical resident at the Yale-New Haven Hospital; he also served in Vietnam as a captain in the U.S. Army Medical Corps, earning a Bronze Star.

Specializing in care of the spine, White worked at Harvard Medical School as a professor of orthopedic surgery, and as the Ellen and Melvin Gordon Professor of Medical Education. For thirteen years, White served as chief of the orthopedic surgery department at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston; he also founded the academic orthopedic program at the Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center.

A noted author in his medical specialty, White co-wrote (with Dr. Manohar M. Panjabi) Clinical Biomechanics of the Spine and Biomechanics of the Musculoskeletal System. White also wrote Your Aching Back: A Doctor's Guide to Relief; Back Care; Advances in Spinal Fusion: Molecular Science, Biomechanics and Clinical Management; and Clinical Biometrics of the Spine, a standard reference book for orthopedists. In 2006, White was awarded the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons Diversity Award for his life's work, and his contributions to his field.

White met his wife, Anita, during his Ph.D. studies at the Karolinska Institute; the couple had three daughters.

Video Oral History Interview with Dr. Augustus A. White, III, Section A2005_107_001_001, TRT: 0:30:00?

Dr. Augustus A. White III was born on June 4, 1936 in Memphis, Tennessee to Vivian Dandridge White and Augustus White, Jr. His maternal grandfather, Sidney Dandridge, the illegitimate child of a white doctor and a mixed-race woman, left home at the age of fifteen because of abuse from his half-siblings, and later became a successful businessman. White's mother was born in Woodstock, Tennessee in 1912 as the youngest of thirteen children. All her sisters were teachers, and she skipped two grades in school. White's father was born in 1901 in Holly Springs, Mississippi. He attended Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tennessee with Dr. William Montague Cobb and worked at Terrell Memorial Hospital in Memphis. White and his family lived in an apartment in the hospital. He remembers adults asking him if he planned on becoming a doctor like his father. When he was eight years old, his father died. His mother, who had previously been a homemaker, began working as an English teacher and librarian.

Dr. Augustus A. White III attended Manassas High School in Memphis, Tennessee. He remembers his art teacher's mentoring and the school's strong focus on African American history. He also recalls Mary McLeod Bethune's lecture while visiting to the school, and seeing jazz legends like Hank Crawford perform. White was trained in boxing by his stepfather, who was a coach at another school. In ninth grade, he entered the exclusive Mount Hermon School for Boys in Gill, Massachusetts. Every student was required to work part time, and White eventually became a waiter in the faculty dining hall. He enjoyed his religious studies classes, singing in the choir at Mount Hermon and seeing Howard Thurman and James S. Robinson delivering sermons at the chapel. White was recognized for his achievements in football, wrestling and lacrosse. After graduating in 1953, he attended Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island, where he was the first African American to pledge Delta Upsilon Fraternity, both on campus and nationally.

Dr. Augustus A. White III became the first African American president of a Delta Upsilon Fraternity chapter while at Brown University. The fraternity decided to cancel its national convention rather than allow White to attend, although thirty years later, he was awarded the fraternity's highest honor. White graduated in 1957 and spent the summer working as a scrub nurse at E.H. Crump Hospital in Memphis, which inspired him to become a surgeon. He entered Stanford University School of Medicine, where he was mentored by Don King, Victor Richards and John Hanbury. While interning at the University of Michigan Medical Center, he learned from George Zitomer and David Kline. White returned to California for a general surgery residency. He then completed his orthopedic residency at Yale New Haven Hospital, where he was mentored by Wayne Southwick. During the Vietnam War, White joined the U.S. Army Medical Corps. He recalls working at a leper colony during his deployment and how his views on the war changed.

Dr. Augustus White III provided medical service for a leper colony while stationed in Vietnam with the U.S. Army Medical Corps. He was discharged in 1967, and was awarded a bronze star. After a year at Fort Ord Army Hospital in Monterey County, California, he won a fellowship to research orthopedic biomechanics under Dr. Carl Hirsch at the University of Gothenburg in Sweden. While there, he met his wife, Anita White, and they married in 1974. White returned to Yale University to start an orthopedic biomechanics laboratory. His book 'Clinical Biomechanics of the Spine' was published in 1978. White then served as chief of orthopedics for the first department of orthopedic surgery at Boston's Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center while also teaching at Harvard Medical School. White published 'Your Aching Back: A Doctor's Guide to Relief' and several other books on orthopedics. White speaks about the importance of confronting healthcare disparities and valuing diversity.
