Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Former City Treasurer for the City of Chicago, Judith Carol Rice was born on July 30, 1957, in Chicago, Illinois. The granddaughter of sharecroppers and daughter of Thelma Dean Martin and Fred Rice, Chicago's first African American Police Superintendent, Rice attended Avalon Park Elementary School and Mercy High School. While attending high school, Rice was a member of the drama club and performed in the lead role for her high school's production of Hello Dolly. Rice graduated from high school in 1975, and attended Northern Illinois University from 1975 to 1976. In 1977, Rice began attending Loyola University and graduated cum laude with her B.A. degree in communications in 1981.

In 1982, Rice was hired to work in the Cook County State's Attorney's Office. Rice rose from a Victim/Witness Assistant to Assistant to the Illinois State's Attorney. While working in the Illinois State's Attorney's Office, in 1984, Rice decided to further her education by attending John Marshall Law School. In 1988, Rice earned her J.D. degree and was admitted to the Illinois Bar. In 1989, Rice began her career with the City of Chicago serving as Assistant Corporation Counsel. Rice went on to become the city's managing Deputy Director and then Director of the Department of Revenue from 1993 to 1995. It was in these positions that Rice was instrumental in the complete overhaul of Chicago's parking ticket collection system. Also in 1995, Rice worked as a staff member for Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley.

Between 1996 and 2000, Rice became the first woman commissioner of two of the biggest infrastructure agencies in City of Chicago government; from 1996 to 1999, she served as Commissioner of the Chicago Department of Water, and from 1999 to 2000, she served as head of the Chicago Department of Transportation. In November of 2000, Rice was appointed by Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley as City Treasurer. As City Treasurer, Rice was responsible for all cash and investments for the City of Chicago.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Judith C. Rice, Section A2005_165_001_001, TRT: 0:28:20 ?

The Honorable Judith C. Rice was born in 1957 in Chicago to Thelma Martin Rice and HistoryMaker Fred Rice, Jr. Her maternal grandmother was born in 1907 in rural Texas where she picked cotton for a white landowner. Her maternal grandfather was born in Shreveport, Louisiana and worked as a lumberjack. He relocated to Texas where he met Rice's grandmother at church. Rice's mother was born in 1926 in New Willard, Texas. When she applied for college, some schools, including HBCUs, rejected her because of her darker skin. She became a teacher and moved from Texas to Chicago, where she met Rice's father. Rice's paternal grandparents met in Alabama before they moved to Chicago, where her father was born in 1926. He graduated from DuSable High School and Wilson Junior College and began his police career at the Chicago Park District Police Department. When the Chicago Police Department integrated, he advanced to patrolman and district commander. During Harold Washington's mayoralty, he was appointed superintendent.

The Honorable Judith C. Rice grew up in Chicago's Avalon Park neighborhood where she attended Avalon Park Elementary School and her parents were active in community groups. She shared her mother's musical interests and inherited her father's outlook and mannerisms. Rice's parents discouraged her and her brother from watching television and insisted on regular family dinners, even when her father returned home late from work. Her parents converted to Catholicism so Rice could attend Chicago's Mercy High School. Although she was shy, Rice starred in the drama club's production of 'Hello, Dolly!' She attended Northern Illinois University in DeKalb from 1975 to 1976, before dropping out and returning home. Heeding her father's advice to return to school, she majored in corporate communications at Loyola University Chicago where she studied with Sammy Danna and Kay Felkins. After college, she worked as a victim witness assistant for the Cook County State's Attorney's Office, which inspired her interest in law.

The Honorable Judith C. Rice attended John Marshall Law School in Chicago, Illinois. There, she participated in the Black Law Student Association and formed long-lasting friendships with other African American law students. After graduating from law school in 1988, she returned to the Cook County State's Attorney's Office where she worked first in narcotics, followed by criminal appeals. Rice then began working for the City of Chicago in the corporation counsel's office, representing the city against slum landlords. She then joined the Department of Revenue where she helped enforce parking violations, which created a major source of city revenue. In the mid-1990s, she served as assistant to Mayor Richard M. Daley before being appointed water commissioner, rendering her the first woman to lead an infrastructure department in Chicago. Rice describes the U.S. criminal justice system, including Cook County's systemic prosecution of men of color. She also talks about Chicago's parking regulations.

The Honorable Judith C. Rice served as commissioner of water for the City of Chicago between 1996 until 1999. In that position, she helped modernize the city's water system. In 2000, she managed the city's Department of Transportation before being appointed city treasurer in 2000, filling the spot vacated by HistoryMaker Barbara Ann Lumpkin. She was then elected to the position in 2003. As city treasurer, she established and maintained relationships with the city's banks, in addition to working with brokers and the city's pension funds. With Chancellor of the City Colleges of Chicago HistoryMaker Wayne Watson, she established Our Money Matters, a financial literacy program. Rice reflects upon her work as city treasurer, running for political office and the ways in which law school benefitted her career in government. She describes her hopes for the African American community and her parents' support for her career. Rice reflects upon her life, legacy, and how she would like to be remembered.
